Ouch! Eww! Ahh!

Are these sounds familiar to you from time to time? If so you might have sensitive teeth. Your teeth expand and contract in reaction to changes in temperature to hot and cold food and beverages. Over time, tooth enamel can be worn down, gums may recede or teeth may develop microscopic cracks, exposing the interior of the tooth and irritating nerve endings. Breathing cold air can be painful for those with extremely sensitive teeth. If you are experiencing these discomforts call and arrange an appointment with your dentist.

first aid for knocked out tooth

- FIND YOUR TOOTH!
- Don't handle tooth by the delicate roots.
- Don't rinse tooth with water.
- If tooth is clean, place gently back into socket immediately and apply slight pressure.
- If tooth is dirty rinse using milk and then place back into socket, apply slight pressure.
- Otherwise keep tooth moist by placing in glass of milk or tuck into on side of your cheek .
- GET to the dentist ASAP.

We thank you for your patience and assistance through this transition

medicare update

Most people would be aware the government has stopped the EPC Chronic Illness Scheme. This program has been able to assist many people receive dental treatment . We have not been informed if the government is going to replace this program with another one. Should we received any information from the government we will notify our patients with a letter outlining the relevant details.
